

Figure 1: The eastern half of the site largely transformed for sugarcane production. All three substation location alternatives are located within the sugarcane fields.	Figure 2: Dry Coast Hinterland Grassland at the western end of the study area around the Hector substation
Figure 3: Remnant KwaZulu-Natal Sandstone Sourveld along the eastern edge of the Summerveld area, looking east along the existing Eskom power line corridor	Figure 4: The high-lying escarpment plateau area in the middle of the site has been transformed by urbanization, mostly the Summerveld area
Figure 5: Agricultural dams within the proposed site and highway traversing the site
Figure 6: The Cliffdale area in the southwest of the site is a rapidly expanding rural area	Figure 7: Most of the lower-lying parts of the central and western sections of the site have been transformed for agriculture.